The proposal narrative should address the following (3-pages single spaced limit):

- Prerequisite skills or knowledge needed for course participation
- Target course participants – Indicate what level of knowledge (e.g., basic, intermediate, advanced) the target audience (e.g., graduate students, emerging researchers, continuing researchers) must have in order to participate fully in the course. Also, indicate the number of course participants you can accommodate.
- Rationale – Provide a rationale for this course. Why is this course important to education research and those who work in the field?
- Learning objectives – List and clearly define the learning objectives and purpose(s) of the course.
- Course content – Describe the topics and issues that the course examines. This should include a description of the course structure (i.e., lecture, small group interactions, hands-on demonstrations), overview of the course, discussion of the course focus, and an overview of the planned activities.
